Behind the Scenes

Reviewers of the JNMT serve as anonymous judges of the work of their peers. They have the responsibility to evaluate both the scientific content and the quality of writing for all submitted and invited articles that appear in the JNMT. Reviewers assist the editor in areas of their expertise regarding the quality of articles. They do this by helping the author express his or her ideas clearly and by carefully reviewing the scientific technique used in performing an investigation.

These reviewers devote their time and talents as a service to the Society and its readership. To provide peak use of their skills they must constantly stay on top of all developments and be thoroughly familiar with all background information pertinent to nuclear medicine. Their dedication and devotion to this duty deserves our recognition and appreciation.

In addition to our reviewers, whose names are listed below, the work of the Continuing Education Committee has become increasingly important in defining continuing education topics for the JNMT and recruiting authors. The Continuing Education articles have become a strong portion of the Journal and there is a tremendous amount of work involved in defining topics for each series and closely working with authors to outline the material that must be covered in each individual article. It takes many months of planning to ensure that the highest quality of material is available through these articles and that the CE quizzes are carefully prepared and graded for Society members to receive their continuing education credit. Members of the Continuing Education Committee, and in particular the Committee Chairman, deserve a round of applause for their continued efforts in this area.
