

Time Flies

Journal of Nuclear Medicine Technology

It seems just weeks ago, that I began working on my first issue as editor of the Journal of Nuclear Medicine Technology. That was three years ago! With the help of many of you, the Journal continues to grow and change. I am looking forward to the next three years as I begin my second term. I will continue to call upon you for your help and constructive criticism.

Changes in the appearance and to some extent the content of the Journal have occurred during the past three years. The most exciting change to me is that our international colleagues have begun submitting articles for publication in the Journal. Papers from Great Britain, the Netherlands, Kuwait, Japan, and Australia have been published. In the September issue, President Mickey Williams expressed a hope for a lasting international coalition of nuclear medicine technologists through which all can benefit from the sharing of expertise, skills, and knowledge.

To that end, the editorial staff will include items of international interest in the Technologist News section and will continue to encourage submission of scientific articles from other countries. I have also begun communication with the Japanese Journal of Nuclear Medicine Technology to establish a mechanism whereby the two journals may exchange articles or abstracts of articles. The editorial staff feels that the Journal is an appropriate forum to foster international relationships and will continue to encourage such relationships in the coming years.

The production of the Journal requires the work of many people. Of utmost importance are the reviewers who donate their time for the peer review process. Without their efforts, it would be impossible to produce the quality journal you have come to expect. The individuals listed below have served as reviewers for the Journal of Nuclear Medicine Technology during 1991. On behalf of the Journal staff and the membership of the Technologist Section, I thank them for their contribution.
