Facts on Figures

Although it may appear the same, this issue of the Journal of Nuclear Medicine Technology is significantly different from all those that have preceded it. Primarily through the efforts of Jim Swan, the Managing Editor, we have enlisted the services of a different printing house. This move is expected to result in the improvement of production efficiency and fiscal status.

This issue also introduces a box containing illustration information for authors. We have tried to present this information in a straightforward, understandable manner. Figures and graphs are as difficult to prepare as they are important to an article; therefore, we want to help you make your illustrations as professional as possible, the first time around. In addition, the JNMT Style Manual for Authors is available on request. Please do not hesitate to call Jim Swan or me for consultation if you are considering submitting an article to the JNMT.

In future issues, the page location of this information box, which appears for the first time below, will be indicated on the Table of Contents page.
